About the speaker:

In 1986, while on a tour of Auschwitz-Birkenau, photojournalist and educator Ann Weiss accidentally came across 2,400 photographs taken by that concentration camp's prisoners. While most photos of this era depict the dehumanization of the victims, these extraordinary photos provide an intimate and compelling record of who these people were, whom they loved and what mattered most to them.

Inspired by this discovery, Weiss has embarked on a tireless quest to bring these remarkable images to life, searching worldwide for the people photographed, the names to preserve and the stories to share that would provide the context necessary for fully understanding and appreciating their significance. A rare collection of treasured personal photographs brought by victims to the Nazi death camps, The Last Album is a unique testament to the vitality of their lives before destruction.
